

Dear Sir or Madam

Been programming in some form since college. But only a little more than a year ago I came across Ruby on Rails. Ever since then I have been independently learning and working on ROR start-up project (Undersky.co.uk/home). It required a great deal of research, self-motivation and patience to get started from scratch. And now I really feel ready to join a team and apply all of that experience to new projects and further learning.

I believe I have all of the necessary skills for this job, and if I lack something my curiosity, eagerness to learn and aptitude to quickly pick up new skills will help me to rise to expectations. I can quickly become a valuable part of a team and work really well with others as well as on my own.

As a programmer I would love to be in an environment that nurtures learning and keeps challenging the mind. And as a person I just want to do something meaningful, stimulating and fun all the time.

Thank you for taking the time to consider this application and I would really love to get to know more about the company and its people.

Yours sincerely,

Richard D'Lonesteen
